PRELIMINARY CONFAB
ON TURKISH MATTERS

Another Postponement of Lausanne Conference
Seems Probable.

London, Nov. 13.—(By the Associated Press).—Although the Lausanne conference for the making of peace in the Near East has been postponed for a week, being fixed now for November 20, official circles here take the view that another postponement will be necessary if Great Britain fails to win her point that a preliminary conference must be held by the representatives of Great Britain, Italy and France.

The British government is insisting on some sort of consultation with the other allies, either through personal talks or, failing that, by means of notes, in order to learn exactly where Great Britain stands before she enters the conference.

MISUNDERSTAND U. S.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Washington, Nov. 13.—The impression apparently prevailing in Constantinople and reflected in yesterday's news dispatches, that the United States has sent a new note to Europe regarding the Near East peace settlement was said at the State Department today to be based on a misunderstanding of the facts in the case.

Department officials said the only American communication on the subject, which, in the hands of Rear Admiral Bristol, American commander at Constantinople, is a copy of the statement of the American position sent on October 27 in the form of an "aide memoire" to Ambassadors Harvey, Herriek and Child.

Admiral Bristol, in common with diplomatic relations of the government in other capitals, has authority to make use of his copy of the "aide memoire" and it is assumed he has done so to correct misapprehension as to American views.

Parts Were Omitted.
In the original publication of the American communication in Europe some of the points emphasized by Secretary Hughes, including the declarations regarding the capitulations and indemnity, were omitted. At about the same time, garbled publication is said here to have been made abroad of Secretary Hughes' remark at Boston dealing with the American attitude on Near East issues.

It is believed in Washington that these incomplete accounts purporting to give American viewpoints have been in circulation in Constantinople and that Admiral Bristol has made use of his discretionary authority to publish a correct text of the "aide memoire" and perhaps to hand a copy of it to the Kemalists authorities.

There is no question but that the demand of the Turkish Nationalists for abolition of the regime of capitulations is viewed with concern in Washington, although state department officials have been reticent in view of the complex and difficult situation in which the allied governments find themselves in their efforts to work out a peaceful solution at Lausanne.

London, Nov. 13.—(By the Associated Press).—The Lausanne conference having been postponed to Nov. 20, the question most urgently asked here is whether it will be possible to maintain peace in Constantinople in the interim. Restoration of communications has revealed such an ugly situation that the utmost tact and skill will be necessary to prevent violent outbreaks.

All reports coming to London concur in saying that the extremists are dominating the Ankara government, while its agents in Constantinople are following the policy of defiance toward the allies and terrorism among the local population.

Residents of Constantinople are described as being in a state of extreme alarm while the position of the allied troops is represented as one which may soon become untenable.

The establishment of martial law alone can make Constantinople safe. Commentators in London generally insist strongly on the necessity for the allied representatives to meet before they face the Turks in Lausanne in order to decide a common policy.

Unless this is done, some observers feel it will be impossible for Great Britain to be represented at Lausanne at all.

from Houston.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Houston, Tex., Nov. 13.—The most disastrous fire in the twenty-one years history of the Gulf Coast Oil fields now is raging in the Humble sector, seventeen miles northeast of Houston. Three quarters of a million barrels of oil now are burning, and with a stiff wind in the north, fully 2,000,000 barrels of oil are endangered.

Sunday afternoon's storm is responsible. At 4:30 o'clock during a terrific downpour of rain, a bolt of lightning struck tank number 21 of the Gulf Refining Company, transportation subsidiary of the Gulf Oil Corporation. A column of flame shot skyward 200 feet, followed by a dense cloud of black smoke and a report that shook houses and rattled window panes all over the Humble townsite.
At 2:45 a. m. Monday tank 22, immediately adjoining tank 21 on the north caught fire and now is burning fiercely. The flames fanned by the wind, now threaten tanks number 23 and 8 and the big pump station itself.

She had been confined to her bed the greater part of the time and was found in a dying condition by Mrs. Frances Combs, supervising nurse in the ward, at noon yesterday.

DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING JURY IS ANTICIPATED

Herrin Mine Massacre
Trial is Resumed
This Morning.

BULLETIN.
Marion, Ill., Nov. 13.—(By the Associated Press).—Four jurors have been tentatively accepted by the state in the Herrin mine riot cases and veniremen are being examined in groups of four to expedite the work of selecting a jury. After being accepted by the state, the prospective jurors are turned over to the defense for examination.

Marion, Ill., Nov. 13.—(By the Associated Press).—Difficulty in obtaining a jury to try the first five men charged with murder in connection with the Herrin mine killings, was anticipated by the prosecution and defense when the trial, adjourned since last Thursday, was resumed today.

Approximately 100 talemens were in the panel called for jury service today, and with one hundred promptory challenges granted, both the state and defense attorneys predicted that the task of selecting a jury would require at least a week and probably ten days.

The trial was halted last week by agreement so that the small court room of Williamson county Circuit court could be remodelled to permit facilitation of the case.

The men on trial are Otis Clark, Bert Grace, Peter Miller, Joseph Carangi and Leva Mann, all of whom are considered by the prosecution as ring-leaders of the riots, which resulted in twenty-three deaths at the Lester strip mine, near here, last June 21 and 22. The men are coal miners, except Miller, who is a chauffeur, and Mann, a laborer.

Trials of the remaining scores of men indicated in connection with the disorders are to follow.

LIMITATION OF COOK COUNTY'S POWER IS
MAIN HOWL OF LEAGUE

Reasons for Objecting to New Constitution Center on That.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Chicago, Nov. 13.—Twelve of its reasons for opposing the proposed new constitution for Illinois, to be submitted to the people in the special election on Dec. 12, were cited today by the Peoples Protective League, the organization formed to oppose adoption of the document.

The twelve objections were based on the following contentions:
That it would limit the right of citizens charged with crime to be admitted to bail, by investing judges with discretionary power.

That it would make possible trial on a criminal charge without previous showing of cause and indictment.

Limit Cook County
That it would limit Cook county's senate representation to one-third its membership, although the county has more than 47 per cent of the state population.

That it would limit Cook county's representation on the supreme bench to two out of nine judges.

That it would limit Cook county's representation in future constitutional conventions to 45 out of 121 members.

That it would deprive the people of the right to enact laws concerning court practice and pleading.

That it would deprive the electorate of power to select many judges, vesting this in the Supreme Court, seven of whose members would be from outside Cook county.

Fear for High Court
That it would directly or indirectly give the Supreme Court authority to select from 500 to 600 office holders.

That in imposing these duties on the Supreme Court it would lower the court's dignity and impair its effectiveness.

That it would impose burdensome income taxes, allowing the head of a family $1,000 exemption and unmarried persons $500 and would discriminate in favor of "owners of intangibles."

That it would prevent legislation by initiative of the people.

That it would provide "many other dangerous innovations upon the present constitution, which will be pointed out in the campaign this organization proposes to carry out."

FOUR ARRESTED ARE ALLEGED TO HAVE TAKEN COAL

Dixon Men Accused By Northwestern Ry.
Special Agent.

Members of the sheriff's force have been busy since late Saturday afternoon trying to locate a party of four Dixon men who are charged with the larceny of coal from the Chicago & Northwestern railway. Robert Emory was the first to be taken into custody Saturday evening by Deputies Lichter and Phillips. They were placed in jail and Sunday morning Herman Bock was taken in the toll. This morning James Mocklin and Oliver Boyer were arrested, but were released upon furnishing bonds.

Warrants for the arrest of the quartette were sworn out by Special Agent Gephart of the North Western before Justice Grover Gehant. It is charged that a carload of coal which was standing on a sidetrack back of the Universal Oats plant in Dementown, was entered late Friday night and a wagon load of coal hauled to the home of Robert Emory. When the wagon returned for another load, Officer John Winters is said to have put a stop to the theft and identified the parties implicated. It was stated this morning that Mocklin, who was a former member of the local police force, and Boyer blame the theft on Emory and Bock. The case was set for trial before Justice Grover Gehant at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Liquor Raids By Sheriff's Force in Amboy Saturday Eve

Deputies Lichter, Risley and Metzler from the sheriff's office went to Amboy Saturday night where they were joined by Deputy John Gentry and Officers Kelleher and Holleran of the police department of that city in a liquor raid. The first place visited was the home of Frank ("Dude") Searls. The officers reported they found two empty jugs and plenty of other but were unsuccessful in locating any of the finished product.

They then secured search warrants and went to the home of Glen Guthrie about three miles south of Amboy. A search of the premises disclosed a small keg of mash, and a half gallon of finished product was found in the garage. Guthrie was taken to Amboy and arraigned before Justice Hines who continued the case until Thursday morning at 9 o'clock. Guthrie was liberated upon furnishing bonds in the sum of $300.

A third search warrant was served the officers going to the Mahlon Guthrie home in Amboy, but they were unsuccessful in their investigation.

"Her Temporary Husband" at Sterling, on Tuesday

That gay comedy which delighted Chicago audiences all summer, began its New York engagement the first week in September at the Frazee theatre. An especially selected company has been placed on tour and will be seen at Academy of Music, Sterling, Tuesday, Nov. 14th. "Her Temporary Husband" is described as a well written, wholesome and dashing comedy, which races along at top speed. It is considered a worthy successor to "Dulcy" which opened the Frazee theatre last season. The wise ones predict "Her Temporary Husband" will make even a greater success, as it contains in addition to witty lines, and side-splitting drolleries, some farcical situations that are decidedly original.

To test also the constitutionality of the present law, the Chicago Board of Trade has petitioned for an injunction restraining the government from enforcing the law. Enforcement of the law has been held up until Nov. 13th.

WHAT PROMINENT LAYMEN SAY OF THE VALUE OF THE CHURCH

BY W. W. LEHMAN.
The natural development of mankind is four-fold: Physical, Mental, Social and Spiritual.

In early Colonial days, American people were educated in schools that gave almost equal attention to this four-fold development. Today things have changed. Our public schools look after the physical, intellectual and social side. What about the spiritual?

The CHURCHES must see to the spiritual, or it is neglected. Yet many people try to do the CHURCH. They hinder its progress. They invent and employ questionable entertainments that sap the very spiritual life from our youth.

All true-hearted Americans are proud of the fact that our nation was founded upon Christianity, and that she still retains the name Christian.

Do we want America to turn Pagan or become barbarous? Will America stand long as an ideal before all other nations if God is not honored or worshipped? To all red-blooded Americans the answer is No! No! Then let us fill the churches and uphold her prophets.

JAPANESE NOT ELIGIBLE FOR NATURALIZATION

Supreme Court Holds
They Can't Become
U. S. Citizens.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Washington, Nov. 13.—Japanese are not eligible for naturalization in the United States, it was held today by the supreme court.

In its finding the court disposed of two cases, one brought from Hawaii by Taku Ozawa against the United States and the other brought by Takiji Yamashita, and Charles Hio Koko against the Secretary of State of Washington. In the latter case both Japanese had been naturalized by a court of the state of Washington, but were refused incorporation as a real estate firm on the ground that their naturalization had been illegal.

The lower federal courts denied naturalization in both cases, but the ninth circuit Court of Appeals in considering the Ozawa case, suspended its decision and asked the Supreme Court for instructions as to whether Japanese are eligible for citizenship under the naturalization laws.

The question largely turned on whether section 2169 of the revised statutes, restricting naturalization to "free white persons" and those of African descent were still in force.

MANY IN IOWA CITY

Iowa City, Iowa, Nov. 13.—(By the Associated Press).—Quartering automobiles from virtually every county in the state and many from other states, Iowa City today boasts more cars per capita than any other town in Iowa as a result of the continuous rains during the last forty-eight hours, which have made every road out of the city impassable.

Since Saturday night, when the first of the homecomers who came here for the Iowa-Minnesota football game, tried to leave, block and tackle have been in constant demand. Between Iowa City and Cedar Rapids approximately 500 cars were stalled. Hundreds of others remained in Iowa City over Sunday, hoping that Monday morning would bring a drying sun, but it was still raining. Most of them stored their machines and left on early trains and interurbans for their homes. They expect to return this week end for their cars.

THOUSAND DEAD IN EARTHQUAKE LATEST REPORTS INDICATE

Extent of Damage Not Fully Reported as Lines
Are Out.

Santiago, Chile, Nov. 1.—(By the Associated Press).—Relief forces to aid the thousands made homeless by the earthquakes throughout Chile early Saturday morning and the flooding waves which followed the shocks were being mobilized today. The death toll will probably be at least 1,000, it is estimated, and the property loss will run into the millions, as several towns were almost entirely wiped out and heavy damage to buildings and communication lines, and particularly ships along the 1,400 miles of coast affected by the huge waves has resulted from the violent upheavals of nature.

The extent of the casualties, property damages and distress wrought by the catastrophic disturbances has not yet been learned, except in a general way, as many communication lines, both over land and under water, were put out of operation.

Heaviest in North.
Five hundred persons were reported killed at Valparaiso and in the districts surrounding the city. At Coquimbo at least 100 are known to be dead. The damage from the succession of earth shocks which filled the population with terror, was heaviest in the northern provinces of Antofagasta, Atacama and Coquimbo.

Along the coast little ships and big ships were swept on shore, pounded against the rocks and left high and dry. At many small ports wharves and quays were destroyed. Today naval ships were steaming up and down the coast, stopping at various places to send landing parties to the relief of sufferers, many of whom are without food and shelter.

The tidal waves which followed the earthquakes indicated a gigantic disturbance beneath the Pacific. The waters first were drawn away from shore, far below the low tide mark, and then they came rushing back in a great wave. At Antofagasta this queer and frightful movement of the sea was repeated five times, until the city was battered almost to ruins and the entire population fled to the hills.

The tremors were so severe that some of the seismographs were put out of operation. The total duration of the shocks was three hours and forty minutes and the estimated radius 1,200 kilometers in a direction transverse to the Andes.

ONLY ONE METHOD—

There's only one method of meeting life's test;
Jes' keep on a-strivin' and hope for the best;
Don't give up the shop and retire in dismay
Cause hammers are thrown when you'd like a bouquet.
This world would be tiresome, we'd all get the blues,
If all the folks in it held just the same views;
So finish your work, show the best of your skill,
Some people won't like it, but other folks will.

If you're leadin' an army, or buildin' a fence,
Do the most that you kin with your own common sense.
One small word of praise in this valley of tears
Outweighs in the balance 'gainst cartloads of sneers.
The plants that we're passin' as commonplace weeds
Oft prove to be just what some sufferer needs.
So keep on a goin'; don't stay standin' in still;
Some people won't like you, but other folks will.

IF YOU ARE WELL BRED—

You acknowledge all wedding gifts with a note of thanks, written by you personally. Telephoning your thanks, or extending them verbally, will not suffice.

The notes may be short and informal, but they should be written with as little delay as possible. To acknowledge a present sent by a married couple a bride writes to the wife and thanks both. Of course, she includes her husband's thanks with her own.

Banquet Will Mark Termination of Exciting Campaign.

The banquet closing the Y. M. C. A. membership campaign will be held this evening at 6:15 at which time all those who have won honors will receive their appointment to political office.

There are around forty who have, by their campaigning, drawn plums from the tree and these in addition to being appointed to office will be guests of honor at a big chicken dinner. There will be an interesting program following the banquet at which time in addition to the plums being awarded the final vote for president will be announced and Andy Gump or Kernel Cootie will have to make his inaugural address. The officers to be awarded include village postmaster, district attorney, judge of federal court, congressman, senator, foreign ambassador, justice of supreme court and secretary of state.

The highest man will be declared to be vice president. As the campaign does not close till this evening the winner in the presidential campaign cannot be announced as yet but as the race is close both candidates are busy on their speeches. A rousing big time is in store for all who are lucky enough to be included in this banquet.

HOW IS YOUR SPINE? STRAIGHT OR CROOKED?

You can not have a crooked Spine, and still have Health. Each small bone of the Spine out of position means a pressure on the nerves that emit from that place, and results in an interference with the nerve supply to a certain and definite tissue or organ.

Anatomy and Physiology have proven the fact that all tissues and organs are regulated and controlled in their functions by the nerve supply. Hence, an interference with that nerve supply means an abnormal function, which is called Dis-ease.

Chiropractic Adjustments can and will straighten a crooked Spine. A straight Spine means Health. Now, before winter sets in, is the logical time to have us analyze your Spine, to see where the trouble is. If you do not have good health, Chiropractic is the logical solution. Start right now.

SUPREMACY OF THE LAW?

Have perpetrators of the Herrin massacre been disillusioned? They had taken the law into their own hands, forced the officers of Williamson county to forget their oaths, and without capable leadership, indulged in crimes so horrible as actually to shock society. To cap the climax they practically challenged the authorities of the state of Illinois to inflict on them the punishment prescribed by the laws of that state.

The challenge was accepted and the process of law and order was set in motion. A grand jury indicted 434 persons, 245 of them for murder. Result of the trials, begun in Marion, will show whether or not law is supreme in Williamson county and in Illinois, and whether the principal violators of the law are to be subjected to adequate penalties.

The present outlook for justice is dubious. Results of Tuesday's election in Williamson county make it quite clear that the trial should not have been begun in that county. Sheriff Thaxton ran as republican candidate for county treasurer Tuesday (looks like preparation for the sea-saw game in that county). He was charged with a policy of non-interference at the time of the murders and of later acts showing sympathy with the murderers. He was elected by a majority of nearly 6000 and received twice the big republican vote that was cast in the Harding landslide in 1920. Add to this the fact that George Galligan, the republican who was elected sheriff, has two relatives under indictment in these cases, and it is made clear that the people of Williamson county are willing to shield all of the accused men, also that it is going to be difficult if not impossible to get a jury. Twelve men who will stand ready to live up to their oaths as jurors will be hard indeed to secure.

The trial that was begun last week was that for the murder of only one of the victims, Howard Hoffman. It appears that the state, realizing the stupendous task it would be to try more than twenty murder cases, intends to prosecute only the leaders who incited and helped perpetrate the ruthless killings. In line with this intention, the state at once nolle prossed the indictments against all the men indicted for this murder except five. Men whose cases were thus disposed of had each been indicted for from five to seven other murders.

There are many who believe that change of venue from Williamson county should have been taken, and people generally will look with interest to the evidence presented in the Hoffman case and to the fairness of the jury's verdict thereon, if a jury is secured by the court at Marion. Only a fair and impartial verdict in this case can in any degree wipe away the stigma that these murders have put upon Williamson county.

If the authorities of the state, backed by a public opinion that is nation wide, can not obtain verdicts convicting the men who placed themselves above law and committed these horrible murders, the most shocking in the history of American industry, then Williamson county will long be regarded as a blot on the fair name of Illinois.

HIS MOTIVE

Gold medals are being pinned on various corporation executives, for their good work in the Safety First movement.

A specially large medal should be struck off for that powerful force Human Selfishness. For selfishness is back of the Safety First movement just as it is back of most other human activities.

Corporations originally began campaigns against accidents, not primarily to save human life, but to save themselves against damages suits arising from the list of killed and injured.

The humane motive is more existent now. Incidentally, corporations have discovered that $1 spent in preventing accidents often pays back $100 in lower accident claims. The safety movement is profitable, so it'll go on, as a simple matter of investment, long after all of us are dead.

In analyzing a situation or a suggestion of any sort a clear comprehension of the matter is more quickly arrived at by remembering that 99 times out of 100 some one is seeking a profit.

When pulley wheels had spokes, people occasionally got caught in them and were either killed or crippled. Some one invented a solid fly-wheel, without spokes. It is easy to sell, on the simple argument that it will save human life and limb. But the selfish element crops out in the invention and manufacture of the improved, safeguarded wheel—for profit—a selfish motive.

So it goes, all the way from a politician seeking office, down to the simple transaction of borrowing a lawnmower.

The presence of a selfish motive in nearly every possible situation and proposal should not make any one cynical.

The very fact that the backers of the "thing" are after a profit makes its success more certain.

Men do those things best, in which they have a chance to profit personally. It is the old law of achievement working toward a definite goal—harvesting the crop from toil.

The profit sought by the force of selfishness, of course, is not always money. It may be fame or the inner satisfaction to one's vanity in having accomplished a good deed.

Even charity, according to psychologists, usually is a manifestation of vanity—makes the given "feel better."

BEWARE—CANCER!

One woman in eight and one man in 14 dies of cancer. So the public should gladly give deep thought to the medical warnings and advice circulated during Cancer Week, Nov. 12-13.

Here are the important facts you should know about this dread disease: First—Cancer usually is caused by chronic irritation, particularly of the stomach. Thirty per cent of cancers in men and 21 per cent in women are in the stomach.

Second—Cancer is not contagious. It is not a germ disease.

Third—Cancer is not hereditary, though a person may inherit a "tendency" or physical weakness which, not safeguarded, may enable cancer to develop easily.

Fourth—Cancer, taken in the early stages, often is curable in the hands of medical experts. Radium is working wonders in this line. So is surgery.

Dr. Francis Carter Wood, director of the Columbia University Institute of cancer Research, learned this: Between the ages of 15 and 19, only one person in 250,000 dies of cancer. Between 20 and 24, only one person in 200,000. Between 25 and 34, one man in 10,000 and one woman in 500 dies of cancer. And so the rate rises until, between the ages of 65 and 75, one man in 20 and one woman in 15 dies of cancer.

Thus cancer is especially dangerous in middle age and after. But the irritation or other cause of cancer often starts much earlier, so no one is immune, and all should be on their guard.

As with other diseases, a periodical physical examination by a skilled physician is the best safeguard against cancer.

CHAIN

Life seems to run in a circle. A wise editorial writer on the Daily Item, Sumter, S. C. comments: "The little fishes eat worms. The big fishes eat the little fishes, the birds eat the big fishes, the animals eat the birds, we eat the animals and the worms eat us."

Read that a second time, and you can skip half of the books on philosophy.

HOUSEWORK

The best thinking seems to be coming from small towns, as usual. The Brookville Record furnishes this: "It is hard to understand a sex that is so proud to do housework at $15 a week, but will marry and do it for nothing."

The housewife, of course, works for love, not money. Still, this isn't a satisfactory explanation. As a mystery, love is even more baffling than life. Life doesn't survive. Love does.

SMOKERS

Eleanor Healy, of Marylebone, England, was seldom seen without a cigaret in her mouth when indoors.

The other night she was found dead, a half-smoked "tag" in her fingers.

Dr. Greenwood, called in, said her heart— weakened by nicotine— had not been equal to the strain of pumping blood to digest a heavy dinner.

The doctor urges women to smoke pipes instead of cigarets. Many already do, especially in England. If our flappers take Doc's advice, we trust they'll not turn to cornucopia.

MOVIE

A new English movie, "The Battle of the Ants," shows two rival ant colonies in a war that lasted two weeks. The ants are shown building bridges, attacking in mass formation, looting the enemies' homes, carrying away their buildings materials.

Audiences seem most interested in the ant sentries who guard the bridges and challenge all who pass. Movies of this sort, picturing thrilling adventures in nature, will become common if audiences ever weary of seeing countless new versions of Cinderella, the favorite movie and fiction plot.

EXCEPTIONAL

Only about 28,000 American tourists crossed the Atlantic this summer, steamship officials estimate. Many of them behave bestially at European bars. And from the 28,000, a considerable section of Europe will form its opinions of the average American.

Opinions usually are based on minorities. You read of a few scandals and decide the nation's going to pot, forgetting the millions of respectable people who never get publicity for the simple reason that they are respectable and law-abiding.

SAM

Elizabeth Bowman, 102 years old, dies in Kentucky. She lived through changes that must have bewildered her, especially the cost of supporting the gaudy old gentleman, Uncle Sam.

In 1820, year in which Elizabeth Bowman was born, the cost of running the national government was only $21,763,024.

Multiply that by 200 and you have, in round figures, the cost of running Uncle Sam's affairs in 1922.

Add Dan's name to your list of useful citizens, on whose toiling shoulders civilization is being carried ahead despite public affairs lunatics, rogues and loafers.

The civilized dancing seen at leading social events is more immoral than the hula-hula, says Vaughan MacCaughy, school official in Honolulu.

This is true in occasional cases, but not as a general rule.

The human brain apparently is incapable of discussing morals without exaggeration one way or the other. That's also true of the discussions of everything, particularly in America, a nation of extremists.

FLOOD

Germany prints 53 billion paper marks in one week, which brings her total circulating currency up to 455 billions.

Half a thousand business firms over there get permission to print their own money, the government presses not being able to print marks as fast as they're needed.

The two doubthboys who traveled all over Russia, using cigar store coupons for money, should be able to continue their journey into Germany.

FATE

General Blucher, famous police dog, served through some of the worst campaigns of the war. Originally he was with the German army, but deserted and went over to the American forces, attaching himself to Captain Henry G. Montgomery.

This dog, under heavy fire, hundreds of times, lived through the war. Now he is dead. The cause is blood poisoning, due to a splinter from a stick which he retrieved in play.

He was a victim of uncertainty, sometimes called "fate," the element that makes life interesting. Man loves the unexpected, which is prob-

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS

"What are you that way for?" asked Nick

Mars was a queer place. There were no two people alike. The Twins had seen and spoken to a square man made of stone and a queer, funny woman made of wood. And now what do you suppose? They saw a three-cornered boy. His head was three-cornered and his hat was three-cornered and his legs and feet and hands and arms were three-cornered, and he was three-cornered all over.

"What are you that way for?" asked Nick.

"What way?" asked the boy. He threw away a three-cornered apple that he'd been eating and whistled a three-cornered tune and smiled a three-cornered smile.

"Why are you all corners and edges and sharp places?" said Nick, looking him over from hat to shoes—none too politely. "I'm afraid."

"I don't know," answered the three-cornered boy, turning a three-cornered somersault. "What are you two people that way for?"

Russia may be our best export customer by 1930.

"What way?" asked Nancy in surprise.

"Oh, all round and curly and soft and white and different. We've got lots of people on Mars but none like you. Where do you live, and what are you doing here, and why did you come and how do you like it and what are you after and when are you going home?"

"My oh, my!" gasped Nancy. "You can ask a lot of questions. But I'll answer as many of them as I can. We're Nancy and Nick, the Twins from the Earth, and we're hunting for Mother Goose's broom which was lost."

And she told him about it.

"Did you see it?" asked Nick. The three-cornered boy blinked his three-cornered eyes and shook his head. "Never heard of it," said he, moving away and breaking into a three-cornered run.

Triumphs of M. Jonquille

THE MOTTLLED BUTTERFLY

THE opera had opened. The music began to fill the corridors. But M. Jonquille did not go in.

He remained idling in the foyer, a cigarette in his fingers, his manner and air, a well-bred, bored indifference. The whole house was crowded. There was not a vacant seat.

It was the last performance in Paris of Mme. Zirtzenoff's Salome. A few belated persons passed M. Jonquille and entered the doors to the boxes. Some of these persons addressed him; all regarded him. He was a well-known figure in Paris. His friendship was worth something, and whether one knew him, or cared to know him, all were curious about the man.

The vast music assembled and extended itself.

The foyer became empty, and still M. Jonquille did not go in. Perhaps it was because Mme. Zirtzenoff had not gone on. She was a famous beauty; her Salome had the abandon which stimulated even the faded nerves of France. It had been on the opera for fifty days, and Paris was still keen to see it.

The woman was a Russian exotic, one of those alluring creatures that always assemble a fabulous legend. There was a wild passion in her Salome, and her conquests were the gossip of Paris.

The opera had continued for perhaps thirty minutes. Mme. Zirtzenoff had come on; her voice, like a silver bell, reached M. Jonquille clearly where he sauntered in the foyer.

Presently the door to a box opened and one of the pages of the theater appeared with an immense bouquet of orchids. The flowers were worth a thousand francs. They could have been grown in Paris only with extreme care and under every perfection of light and temperature. It was a mass of flowers that would have drawn the attention of anybody, exquisite orchids of the genus Oncidium Kramerii, called the Mottled Butterfly.

It seemed to have drawn the attention of M. Jonquille. He stopped the page as he passed him. "Caroon," he said, handing him a piece of gold, "find me a box of cigarettes before you go on with those flowers. Quickly—run; I will hold them until you return."

The boy knew the great chief of the Service de la Surete.

He gave M. Jonquille the bouquet of orchids and disappeared down the stairway. He was gone hardly a moment when he returned. M. Jonquille had not moved from his position by a pillar of the foyer. He handed back the orchids to the page and received the box of cigarettes.

He paused a moment, fingered the box but did not open it; instead, he walked a few steps down the foyer and entered the box from which the page had come out with the orchids.

One looking on would have wondered why the Prefect of Police required a pack of cigarettes, at the cost of a ten-franc gold-piece—especially as, after having turned it in his hand, he had put it carelessly into his pocket and entered a box.

It would appear that he waited these cigarettes before entering the box. But to what end? One could not smoke in a box at the Opera, at the most expensive point in the ultra-fashionable audience of Paris.

Although the great opera house was packed with people—not a vacant seat visible to the eye—there was but one person in the box which M. Jonquille had entered.

He was a person that anyone would pause almost anywhere to observe. He was young; he was exquisitely dressed—a dress in which there was some of the over-extravagance of detail, that suggestion of elegance, which the Parisian cannot avoid.

He was a young man and extremely handsome, a blond French type with a dainty mustache and regular Italian features, and thick, soft, yellow hair presenting the gloss of the seal's coat. In his physical aspect, for perfection of detail, the man had no equal on the Paris boulevards.

It had got him a rich American wife and lifted him, as by a fairy lamp, out of the sordid environments of an old family in decay. The thing seemed a piece of the design of a Providence with an esthetic sense.

This exquisite person would have been incongruous except in an atmosphere of wealth. He had an apartment now beyond the Arc de Triomphe, one of those wonderful apartments that the American invents.

But it was rumored that he had not the freedom of his wife's money-sacks. He did not what she allowed him, but he ought to be written here, in justice to the Marquis, that it was no he who complained. Why should he? The allowance was evidently enough for any reasonable man. He had the best of everything; if he felt any sense of stint, there was to sign either by word or act.

In form, the Marquis was above reproach. There could be no surprise to the fashionable audience of Paris in the fact that the Marquis was alone in the box. His wife was a visit to America, and it was better fitting, that the Marquis should be alone than to be with another who might console him for his wife's absence. If the Marquis was not the best of men, he was at any rate not the least discreet.

He rose and bowed when the Prefect entered.

"Ah, monsieur," he said, "I am charmed to see you; Mme. Zirtzenoff will be even worth an hour of the priceless time of the Prefect of Paris. . . . I shall be honored to have you as guest; pray sit down."

M. Jonquille sat down. He looked a moment over the vast audience, brilliant and distinguished; a moment at Mme. Zirtzenoff on the distant stage; and then he addressed his host.

"Monsieur," he said, "Mme. Zirtzenoff is, I imagine, beyond rubies. But I have not come here to observe her; I have come to ask you about the robbery in your apartment. That was an extraordinary robbery."

It was most extraordinary, monsieur," replied the Marquis. "The Marquis regretted that you were out of France at the time. Where were you, monsieur?"

Then the Marquis added with a laugh:

"You cannot be expected to tell that; you protect us, monsieur, by your mystery. If the Lecca could say, 'Tomorrow M. Jonquille will be in Brussels,' we should not have a jewel or a five-franc piece remaining to us."

"Alas, monsieur," replied the Prefect, "you do me too much honor; there are a number of very good men with the Service de la Surete, quite as capable as I to protect Paris."

The Marquis laughed.

"You have an affection for your associates, M. Jonquille, that I fear clouds your intelligence. Nothing could have been managed more stupidly than the investigation of my apartment. In your absence, monsieur, you cannot imagine into what hopeless commonplace the investigation of a criminal affair in Paris can descend."

"Alas, monsieur, there is a gulf fixed between Alexander and the Lieutenants of Alexander! But for my own feeble efforts, nothing would have resulted from the police investigation in my apartment. The necklace of diamonds which the Marquis purchased for five hundred thousand francs—acquired from the crown jewels of Russia—would have disappeared without a clue to the thief. As it happened, he was brought to justice; he confessed and was sentenced for an incredible period by the court. But for me,"—and again the Marquis laughed—"there would have been no thief sentenced. . . . Your inspectors, monsieur, were ridiculous."

There was humility in the Prefect's reply.

"And the Marquis Chantelle was magnificent! His fame in the affair has reached me; he is the admiration of the Surete. I have come, monsieur, to verify the details, and from yourself. I do not know what rumor may have added or omitted."

He bowed slightly, like one would add a gesture of complacency to his words.

"Willingly, monsieur," replied the Marquis. "I shall be charmed to verify details; but you will pardon me if I am moved to ask you for your opinion on a certain phase of this mystery. You must have an opinion, monsieur, if you do not have an explanation, in fact."

He turned a little in his seat. "Monsieur," he said, "how did it happen that when we had fixed this robbery upon Jean Lequex, a member of the Lecca, he admitted it before the court and asked for an immediate sentence? But he would admit nothing else; he would not say what he had done with the necklace or where it was."

"That was a strange position for a man to take, monsieur. He could have nothing from the judge. Why confess? It did not lighten his sentence; and after all, our evidence against him was circumstantial. Why did he not say what he had done with the necklace? The judge would have reduced the sentence. Why conceal it, monsieur, and go for this long period of servitude? Did he hope to escape?"

M. Jonquille spoke with decision. "He did not."

"Then, monsieur," continued the Marquis, "why did he refuse to say where the necklace was? Of what service would be the necklace to him after twenty years?"

Again M. Jonquille replied directly and with decision.

"Of no use, monsieur; the man did not expect it to be of any use to him."

"Then, monsieur," continued the Marquis, "why in the name of heaven did he not say where this necklace was, and thereby reduce his sentence?"

M. Jonquille seemed to reflect. "You have asked for my opinion," he said. "I think I can do better than give an opinion. I think I can tell you precisely the reason why Jean Lequex, when he confessed this crime before the court, refused to say what had become of the necklace."

DEEP WATERS—No. 1. TRAGEDY HANGS OVER THE BARRETTS BY ZOE BECKLEY

SILENCE like the hush in electrically charged atmosphere before the crash of storm was over the Barrett breakfast table.

It oppressed even the maid as she came and went with dishes. She wondered, much as simple folk wonder at quarreling gods, why people so comfortably situated as Mr. and Mrs. Barrett should be unhappy.

All the things Nora pictured as bringing joy were there. A beautiful home; two smart cars; the head of the house handsome, well-to-do; the mistress cultured. "A good dresser" and a favorite apparently with everyone—except her husband; a "fine young fellow" of a son about to enter college; a daughter with all the good points of both parents and herself a popular member of the senior class in high school.

What could the Barretts possibly have done? Yet actual tragedy was in the air. Nora sighed as she went out of the room with the eggshells and stood in the pantry thinking, with the swing-door just missing her heels.

John Barrett, a trim, spare man with the ruddy tan of the golfer, regarded his pancakes stonily as he neglected them. His lean face was set. His lips were pale with compression.

Anita Barrett, at the other side of the round table, sat with downcast eyes, her features composed but her eyes betraying suffering nerves.

John Junior, a clean-limbed athlete of 18, gulped his breakfast angrily, as though he were afraid he would break out before he could finish.

Alice, her pretty, vivid face pathetic with conflicting loyalties, confronted with more than she could bear, was the only one whose lips frankly quivered with pain, in whose eyes tears stood.

She was the first to break under the strain of silence. Suddenly putting down her cup, she rose, ran to her mother and with both arms tightly round her neck, pressed her face into her mother's brown hair and sobbed.

Anita absently touched the girl's cheek, patted it, but said nothing. It was more than Alice could endure. Holding her face in the crook of her arm, she pulled loose and ran blindly from the room.

Her brother rose, his boyish features working with emotion, undecided whether to speak out—or rush away. He swallowed hard, wet his lips, tried to speak, but choked on it. He, too, went to his mother, laid his cheek clumsily to hers and with a muttered "So long, dad," went quickly out.

His mother stood up as if to follow him without so much as a glance at her husband. His voice, husky with fury, stopped her.

"Better stay," he clipped out. "There are a few details to arrange. Because—I'm leaving—for good!"

Wife Collects from Husband for Breach of Marriage Contract

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Henrietta, Texas, Nov. 13—Can a wife collect damages from her husband for a breach of his marriage contract?

"Yes," Mrs. Lee Gowan of Henrietta said.

"No," said her husband, J. C. Gowan.

But a Clay county jury, composed entirely of men, held that she can, and awarded the wife $1,500 damages.

This is said to be the first case of its kind ever tried in Texas.

Wire rope, so far as known, was made first in Germany about 1821.

DIXON HIGH SCHOOLS TEAMS SCORE DOUBLE VICTORY ON SATURDAY

Amboy High and Clinton Academy Teams Fell Before Locals.

The Dixon high school football teams, first and second squads, completely swamped their opponents in a double header bill at the north side athletic field Saturday afternoon.

The Amboy high school eleven came to Dixon and were defeated by the local second team, by a score of 64 to 12.

The seconds scored almost at will and the visiting line offered very little resistance to the assaults made upon it by the locals.

The second game was almost as exciting as the opener, the first string of players defeating the St. Mary's team from Clinton, Iowa, by a score of 35 to 6. It was the first defeat the visiting team had met this season at the hands of a high school team.

Maione and McCarthy were the outstanding stars for St. Mary's, Maione proving by his work that he was a clean cut sport and he easily outclassed his team mates as a star.

Although butted by their Dixon opponents, St. Mary's played a hard, clean game and were hard chargers.

Dixon Played Well
For Dixon, Bremer played a wonderful game at tackle and Jones and Rymearson were the feature stars.

The entire Dixon line played one of the best games of the season. Joe Miller was given a chance to demonstrate his ability with the first team and booted the ball between the posts whenever selected for this duty. His line plunging was another feature of his play.

Dixon won the toss and kicked off to St. Mary's. A forward pass, Jones to Bremer, scored the first touchdown in the opening period and Miller kicked the goal. By an end run, Jones ran 25 yards and scored the second touchdown. Miller again kicking goal in the second quarter. Rymearson relieved Gumm in the third period and scored a touchdown. He repeated this in the final period. Morrison received a forward pass from Egler and carried the ball over the line. Miller booted the ball over the bar for each touchdown.

In the last few minutes of play, three straight forward passes by Maione, the star quarter back for St. Mary's, advanced the ball from the 50 yard line to Dixon's two yard line. By two line plunges, Maione carried it over for a touchdown.

"At sea," he answered, with his eyes full of intense feeling—"at sea, I was free at last, doomed as I thought, anguished in spirit, and yet with a wild hope that out of it would come deliverance. I expected to lose my life, and I lived each day as though it would be my last. I was chief officer in a shipful of rogues, chief sinner in a hell of sinners, and yet I had no remorse and no regret. I had done all with an honest purpose, with the good of the sailors in my mind; and so I lived in daily touch with death, honor and dishonor. Yet I never saw a sailor in the shrouds, or heard the night watch call 'All's well!' in the midst of the night and mutiny, that I did not long for a word from you that would take away the sting of death. Those days at sea for ten long weeks were never free from anxiety, not anxiety for myself, only for the men who had put me where I was, had given me captain's rank, had—"

Suddenly he stopped, and took from his pocket the letter he was writing on the very day she landed in Jamaica.

He opened it and studied it for a moment with a dark look in his face.

"This I wrote even as you were landing in Jamaica, and I knew naught of your coming. It was an outbreak of my soul. It was the truth written to you and for you, and yet with the feeling that you would never see it. I was still writing it when Michael Clones came up the drive to tell me you and your mother were here. Here it is with all the truth and terror in it—aye, there was terror, for it gave the soul of my life to one I never thought to see again; and, if seeing, should be compelled to do what I have done—tell her the whole truth at once and so have it over."

"But do not think that in telling it now I repent of my secrecy. I repent of nothing; I would not alter anything. What was to be, and what is has its place in the book of destiny. No, I regret nothing, yet here now I give you this to read while still my story of the days of which you know is in your ears. Here it is. It will tell the whole story, for when you have read it and do understand, then we part to meet no more as friends. You will go back to Virginia, and I will stay here. You will not regret coming here; but you will desire our friendship to cease; and what has been to be no more, while the tincture of life is in your veins, Sheila, read this thing, for it is the rest of the story until now."

He handed her the papers, and she took them with an inclination of the head which said: "Give it to me. I will read it now while my eyes can still bear to read it. I have laid on my heart the nettle of shame, and while it is still burning there I will read all that you have to teach me."

"I will go out in the garden while you read it," he said. "In a half-hour I will come back, and then we can say good-by," he added, with pain in his voice, but firmly.

"No, do not go," she urged. "Sit here on the bench—at the end of it here," she said, motioning with her hand.

He shook his head in negation. "No, I will go and say to your mother that I have told you, and ease her mind, for I know she herself meant to tell you."

As he went he looked at her face closely. It was so young, so pathetic, so pale, yet so strangely beautiful, and her forehead was serene. That was one of her characteristics. In all her life, her forehead remained untroubled and unlined. Only at her mouth and in her eyes did misery or sorrow show. He looked into her eyes now, and he was pleased with what he saw; for they had in them the glow of understanding and the note of will which said: "You and I are parted, but I believe in you, and I will not show I am a weak woman by futile horror. We shall meet no more, but I shall remember you."

As he turned away, it was with the sharp conviction that he had dealt a blow from which the girl would recover, but would never be the same again. She was rich "beyond the dreams of avarice," but that would not console her. But had resources within herself, had what would keep her steady. Her lips opened as though she would say something, but nothing came from them. She only shook her head sadly, as if to say: "You understand. Go, and when you come again, it will be for us to part in peace—at least in peace."

Out in the garden he found her mother. After the first agitated greeting—agitated on her part—he said: "The story has been told, and she is now reading."

He told her the story of the manuscript, and added that Sheila had carried herself with courage.

Presently the woman said to him: "She never believed you killed Errie Boyne. Well, it may not help the situation, but I say, too, that I do not believe you did. I cannot understand why you did not deny having killed him."

"I could not deny. In any case, the law punished me for it, and the book is closed forever."

"Have you never thought that some one—"

"Yes, I have thought, but who is there? The crowd at the Dublin hotel where the thing was done were secret, and they would lie the apron off a bishop. No, there is no light, and to tell the truth, I care not now."

"But if you are not guilty—it is not too late; there is my girl! If the real criminal should appear—can you not see?"

The poor woman, distressedly pale, her hair still abundant, her eyes still bright, her pulses aglow, as they had ever been, made a gesture of appeal with hands that were worn and thin. She had charm still, in a way as great as her daughter's.

"Have You Never Thought That Some One—"

"I can see; but, Mrs. Lynn, I have no hope. I am a man whom some men fear—"

"Lord Mallow!" she interjected.

"He does not fear me. Why do you say that?"

"I speak with a woman's intuition. I do not know what he fears, but he does fear you. You are a son of history; you had a duel with him, and beat him; you have always beaten him, even here where he has been supreme as governor—from first to last, you have beaten him."

"I hope I shall be even with him at the last—at the very last," was Dyck Calhoun's reply. "We were made to be foes. We were from the first. I felt it when I saw him at Trelawney. Nothing has changed since then. He will try to destroy me here, but I will see it through. The man is a fool. I could help him here, but he will have none of it, and he is running great risks. He has been warned that the black slaves will rise if the Maroons have any initial success, and he will listen to no advice. And up there—"

He turned and pointed—"up there in Trelawney the Maroons are plotting and planning, and any day an explosion may occur. If it occurs no one will be safe, especially if the blacks rise too—I mean the black slaves. There will be no safety then for any one."

"For us as well, you mean?"

"For you as well as all others, and you are nearer to Trelawney than most others. You are in their path. So be wise, Mrs. Lynn, and get back to Virginia as soon as may be. It is a better place than this."

"My daughter is mistress here," was the sorrowful reply. "She will have her own way."

"I will tell her what I fear, and she may change her mind."

"But the governor may want her to stay," answered Mrs. Lynn none too sagely, but with that in her mind which seemed to justify her.

"Lord Mallow—oh, if you think there is an influence in him to keep her, that is another question," said Dyck with a grim smile. "But, nevertheless, I think you should leave here and go back to Virginia. It is no safe place for two ladies, in all senses. Whatever Lord Mallow thinks or does, this is no place for you. This place is your daughter's, for her to do what she chooses with it, and I think she ought to sell it. There would be no trouble in getting a purchaser. It is a fine property."

"But the governor might not think as you do; he might not wish it sold."

Mrs. Lynn was playing a bold, indeed, a reckless game. She wanted to show Dyck there were others who would interest themselves in Sheila even if he, Dyck, were blotted from the equation; that the girl could look high, if her mind turned toward marriage. Also she felt that Dyck should know the facts before any one else, so that he would not be shocked in the future, if anything happened. Yet in her deepest heart she wished him well. She liked him as she had never liked any of Sheila's admirers, and if the problem of Errie Boyne had been solved, she would gladly have seen him wedded to Sheila.

"What has the governor to do with it?" he declared. "It is your daughter's own property, and she is free to hold or to part with it. There is no crown consent to ask, no vice-regal approval needed."

Suddenly he became angry, almost excited. His blood pounded in his veins. Was this man, Mallow, to come between his and her fate always, come into his problem at the most critical moment? "God in heaven!" he said in a burst of passion, "is this a land of the British empire or is it not? Why should that man break in on every crisis? Why should he do this or that—say yea or nay, give or take away? He is the king's representative, but he is bound by laws as rigid as any that bind you or me. What has he to do with your daughter or what concerns her? Is there not enough trouble in the world without bringing in Lord Mallow? If he—"

He stopped short, for he saw coming from the summer-house, Sheila with his paper in her hand. She walked slowly and with dignity. But in her face there was no summer, there was only autumn and winter, only the bright frost of purpose. As she came, her mother turned as though to leave Dyck Calhoun. She called to her to wait, and Mrs. Lynn stood still, anxious. As Sheila came near she kept her eyes fixed on Dyck. When she reached them she held out the paper to him.

"It is wonderful," she said quietly, "that which you have written, but it does not tell all; it does not say that you did not kill my father. You are punished for the crime, and we must abide by it, even though you did not kill Errie Boyne. It is the law that has done it, and we cannot abate the law."

"We shall meet no more, then!" said Dyck with decision.

Her lips tightened, her face paled. "There are some things one may not do, and one of them is to be openly your friend—at present."

He put the letter carefully away in his pocket, his hand shaking, then flicking an insect from the collar of his coat, he said gently, yet with an air of warning: "I have been telling Mrs. Lynn about the Maroons up there—he pointed toward Trelawney—"and I have advised your going back to Virginia. The Maroons may rise at any moment, and no care is being taken by Lord Mallow to meet the danger. If they rise, you, here, would be in their way, and I could not guarantee your safety. Besides, Virginia is a better place—a safer place than this," he added with meaning.

"You wish to frighten me out of Jamaica," she replied with pain in her voice. "Well, I will not go till I have put this place in order and brought discipline and good living here. I shall stay here in Jamaica till I have done my task. As for the Maroons, when the trouble comes, I shall not be unprepared," she smiled sadly.

"The governor may not take your advice, but I shall. And remember that I come from a land not without its dangers. We had red Indians and black men there, and I can shoot."

He waved a hand abruptly and then made a gesture—such as an ascetic might make—of reflection, of submission. "I shall remember every word you have said, and every note of your voice will be with me in all the lonely years to come. Good-by—but no, let me say this before I go: I did not know that Errie Boyne was your father until after he was dead. So, if I killed him, it was in complete ignorance. I did not know. But we have outlived our friendship, and we must put strangeness in its place. Good-by—God protect you!" he added, looking into Sheila's eyes.

She looked at him with sorrow. Her lips opened, but no words came forth. He passed on out of the garden, and presently they heard his horse's hoofs on the sand.

"He is a great gentleman," said Mrs. Lynn.

Her daughter's eyes were dry and fevered. Her lips were drawn. "We must begin the world again," she said brokenly. Then suddenly she collapsed and sank upon the ground. "My God—oh, my God!" she said.

CHAPTER XVI.

Lord Mallow Intervenes.

Two months went by. In that time Sheila and Dyck did not meet, though Dyck saw her more than once in the distance at Kingston. Yet they had never met since that wonderful day at Salem, when they had parted, as it might seem, forever. Dyck had had news of her, however, for Darius Boland had come and gone between the two plantations, and had won Michael Clones' confidence. He knew more, perhaps, than he ever conveyed to Dyck, who saw him and talked with him, gave him advice as to the customs of Jamaica, and let him see the details in the management of Enniskillen.

One day Boland brought word that the governor had, more than once, visited Salem with his suite; that he had sat in judgment on a case in Kingston concerning the estate of Salem, and had given decision in its favor; and that Mrs. Lynn and Sheila visited him at Spanish Town and were entertained at King's house at second breakfast and dinner—in short, that Lord Mallow was making hay in Salem plantation. This was no surprise to Dyck. He had full intuition of the foray the governor would make on Sheila, her estate and wealth.

Lord Mallow had acted with discretion, and yet with sufficient passion to warrant some success. He was trying to make for himself a future which might mean the control of a greater colony even. If he had wealth, that would be almost a certainty, and he counted Sheila's gold as a guarantee of power. So, steadily and happily, he pressed his suit. At his dinner-parties he gave her first place nearly always, and even broke the code controlling precedence when his secretary could be overruled. Thus Sheila was given honor when she did not covet it, and so it was that one day at Salem when the governor came to court her she was able to help Dyck Calhoun.

"Then you go to Enniskillen?" Lord Mallow said to Darius Boland, as he entered the plantation, being met by the astute American.

"Sometimes, your honor," was the careful reply.

"I suppose you know what Mr. Calhoun's career has been, eh?"

"Is it true you believed he'd strike a man that wasn't armed, sir?"

The governor winced, but showed nothing. "He'd been drinking—he is a heavy drinker. Do you never drink with him?"

Darius Boland's face took on a strange look. Here was an intended insult to Dyck Calhoun. Right well the governor knew their relative social positions.

One Day Boland Brought Word.

Darius pulled at the hair on his chin reflectively. "Yes, I've drunk his liquor, but not as you mean, your honor. He'd drink with any man at all; he has no nasty pride. But he doesn't drink with me."

"Modest enough he is to be a good republican, eh, Boland?"

"Since your honor puts it so, it must stand. I'll not dispute it, me being what I am and employed by whom I am."

Darius Boland had a gift of saying the right thing in the right way, and he had said it now. The governor was not so dense as to put this man against him, for women were curious folk. They often attach importance to the opinion of a faithful servant and let it weigh against great men. He had once lost a possible fortune by spurning a little terrier of the daughter of the earl of Shallow, and the lesson had sunk deep into his mind.

"Ah, well, he has drunk with worse men than republicans, Boland. He was a common sailor. He drank what was given him with whom it chanced in the fo'castle."

Darius sniffed a little, and kept his head. "But he changed all that, your honor, and gave sailormen better drink than they ever had, I hear. In Jamaica he treats his slaves as though they were men and not Moheicans."

"Well, he'll have less freedom in future, Boland, for word has come from London that he's to keep to his estate and never leave it."

Darius looked concerned, and his dry face wrinkled still more. "Ah, and when was this word come, your honor?"

"But yesterday, Boland, and he'll do well to obey, for I have no choice but to take him in hand if he goes gallivanting."

"Gallivanting—here, in Jamaica! Does your honor remember where we are? Gallivanting—where should he gallivant?"

The governor waved a contemptuous hand. "It doesn't need inequality to find a place, for some do it on their own estate. I have seen it."

Darius spoke sharply. "Your honor, there's naught on Mr. Calhoun's estate that's got the taint, and he's not the man to go hunting for it. Drink—well, suppose a gentleman does take his quatern, is it a crime? I ask your honor, is it a crime in Jamaica?"

"It's no crime, Boland; nevertheless, your Mr. Calhoun will have to take his fill on his own land from the day I send him the command of the London government."

"And what day will that be, your honor?"

To be questioned by one who had been a revolutionary was worse than distasteful to the governor. "That day will be when I find the occasion opportune, my brave Boland," he said sourly.

"Why brave, your honor?" There was an ominous light in Darius' eye. "Did you not fight with George Washington against the king of England—against King George? And if you did, was that not brave?"

"It was true, your honor," came the firm reply. "It was the one right good thing to do, as we proved it by the victory we had. We did what we set out to do. But see, if you will let a poor man speak his mind, if I were you I'd not impose the command on Mr. Calhoun."

"Why, Boland?"

Darius spoke courageously. "Your honor, he has many friends in Jamaica, and they won't stand it. Besides, he won't stand it. And if he contests your honor, the island will be with him."

The governor winced, but he said: "It's what I am ordered to do, my man. I'm a servant of the crown, and the crown has ordained it."

Darius grew stronger in speech. "But why do you have pleasure in it? Is nothing left to your judgment? Do you say to me that if he keeps the freedom such as he has enjoyed you'd punish him? Must the governor be as ruthless as his master? Look, your honor, I wouldn't impose that command—not till I'd taken his advice about the Maroons, anyway. There's trouble brewing, and Mr. Calhoun knows it. He has warned you through the provost-marshal. I'd heed his warning, your honor, or it may injure your reputation as a ruler. No, I'd see myself in nethermost hell before I'd meddle with Mr. Calhoun. He's a dangerous man when he's moved."

"Boland, you'll succeed as a school-master, when all else fails. You teach persistently."

"Your honor is clever enough to know what's what, but I'd like to see the Maroons dealt with. This is not my country, but I've got interests here, or my mistress has, and that's the same to me. . . . Does your honor travel often without a suite?"

The governor waved a hand behind him. "I left them at the last plantation and rode on alone. I felt safe enough till I saw you, Boland."

He smiled grimly, and a grimmer smile stole to the lean lips of the manager of Salem. "Fear is a good thing for forward minds, your honor," he said with respect in the tone of his voice and challenge in the words.

"I'll say this, Boland, your mistress has been fortunate in her staff. You have a ready tongue."

Darius' looks quickened, and he jerked his chin up. "So, your honor, so. But might I ask that you weigh carefully the warning of Mr. Calhoun? There's trouble at Trelawney. I have it from good sources, and Mr. Calhoun has made preparations against the sure risings. I'd take heed of what he says. He knows."

The governor touched up his horse. "Boland, I'll think over what you've said about the Maroons and Mr. Calhoun. He's doing no harm as he is, that's sure. So why shouldn't he go on as he is? That's your argument, isn't it?"

Boland nodded. "It's part of my argument, not all of it. Of course, he's doing no harm; he's doing good every day. He's got a stiff hand for the shirker and the wanton, but he's a man that knows his mind and that's a good thing for Jamaica."

"Does he come here—ever?"

"He has been here only once since our arrival. There are reasons why he does not come, as your honor knows, knowing the history of Errie Boyne."

A quarter of an hour later Darius Boland said to Sheila: "He's got an order from England to keep Mr. Calhoun to his estate and to punish him, if he infringes the order."

Sheila started. "He will infringe the order if it's made, Boland. But the governor will be unwise to try to impose it. I will tell him so."

Sheila had changed since she saw Dyck Calhoun last. Her face was thinner, but her form was even fuller than it was when she bade him good-by, as it seemed to him, forever, and as it at first seemed to her. Through anxious days and nights she had fought with the old passion; and at last it seemed the only way to escape from the torture was by making all thought of him impossible. How could this be done? Well, Lord Mallow would offer a way. Lord Mallow was a man of ancient Irish family, was a governor, had ability, was distinguished looking in a curious, lean way; and he had a real gift with his tongue. He stood high in the opinion of the big folk at Westminster, and had a future. He had a winning way with women—a subtle, perniciously attractive way with her sex, and to be less than he had been delicately persuasive. He had the ancient gift of picturesqueness without ornamentation. He had a strong will and a healthy imagination. He was a man of mettle and decision.

Of all who had entered her field outside of Dyck Calhoun he was the most attractive; he was the nearest to the possible husband which she must one day take. And if at any day at all, why not now when she needed a man as she had never done—when she needed to forget?

She was deluding herself to believe that what she was doing was all for the best; that the clouds were rising; that her fate had fairer aspects than had seemed possible when Dyck Calhoun told her the terrible tale of the death of her father, Errie Boyne. Yet memory gave a touch of misery and bitterness to all she thought and did. For twenty-five years she had lived in ignorance as to her paternity. It surely was futile that her mother should have suffered all those years, with little to cheer her, while her daughter should be radiant in health and with a mind free from care or sadness. Yet the bitterest thing of all was the thought that her father was a traitor and had died sacrificing another man. When Dyck had told her first, she had shivered with anger and shame—but anger and shame had gone. Only one thing gave her any comfort—the man who knew Errie Boyne was a traitor, and could profit by telling it, held his tongue for her own sake, kept his own counsel, and went to prison for four years as the price of his own silence.

He was now her neighbor and he loved her, and if the shadow of a grave was not between them, would offer himself in marriage to her. This she knew beyond all doubt. He had given all a man can give—had saved her and killed her father; in love had saved herself. What was to be done?

In a strange split Sheila entered the room where the governor sat with her mother. She had reached the limit of her powers of suffering. Soon after her mother had left the room, the governor said:

"Why do you think I have come here today?" He added to the words a note of sympathy, even of passion in his voice.

"It was to visit my mother and myself, and to see how Salem looked after our stay on it, was it not?"

"Yes, to see your mother and yourself, but chiefly the latter. As for Salem, it looks as though a master-mind had been at work; I see it in everything. The slaves are singing. If you look out on those who are singing, you'll see they are resting from their labors; that they are fighting the ennui which most of us feel when we rest from our labors. Let us look at them."

The governor stood up and came to the open French windows that faced the fields of sugar-cane. In the near distance were clumps of fruit trees, of hedges of lime and flowering shrubs, rows of orange trees, mangoes, red and purple, forbidden-fruit and grapefruit, the large scarlet fruit of the acou, the avocado-pear, the feathering bamboo, and the Jack-fruit tree, with its enormous fruit-like pumpkins. Around the negro huts were small, individual plantations kept by the slaves, for which they had one day a fortnight, besides Sundays, free to work on their own account. Here and there also were patches of "ground-fruit," as the underground vegetables were called, while there passed by on their way to the open road leading to Kingston wains loaded with sugar-casks, drawn by oxen, and in two cases by sumpter mules.

"Is there anything finer than that in Virginia?" asked the governor. "I have never been in Virginia, but I take this to be in some ways like that state. Is it?"

"In some ways only. We have not the same profusion of wild fruits and trees, but we have our share—and it is not so hot as here. It is a better country, though."

"In what way is it better?" the governor asked almost acidly.

"It is better governed."

"What do you mean by that? Isn't Jamaica well governed?"

"Not so well that it couldn't be improved," was Sheila's reply.

"What improvements would you suggest?" Lord Mallow asked urbanely, for he was set to play his cards carefully today.

"More wisdom in the governor," was the cheerful and bright reply. "He is indifferent to good advice. He has been told of trouble among the Maroons, that they mean to rise; he has been advised to make preparations, and he makes none, and he is deceived by a show of loyalty on the part of the slaves. Lord Mallow, if the free Maroons rise, why should not the black slaves rise at the same time? Why do you not act?"

"Is everybody whose good opinion is worth having mad?" answered the governor. "I have sent my inspectors to Trelawney. I have had reports from them. I have used every care—what would you have me do?"

"Used every care? Why don't you insure the Maroons' peaceableness by advancing on them? Why don't you take them prisoners? They are enraged that two of their herdsmen should be whipped by a negro slave under the order of one of your captains. They are angry and disturbed and have ambushed the roads to Trelawney, so I'm told."

"Did Mr. Calhoun tell you that when he was here?"

"It was not that which Mr. Calhoun told me the only time he came here. But who Errie Boyne was. I never knew who my father was till he told me. My mother had kept it from me all my life."

The Evidence of a Better Understanding

THE last four years have marked the growth of a better understanding between the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) and the public it serves. This better understanding is evidenced by the fact that four years ago there were but 4623 stockholders on the books, whereas today the number has increased to 26,560.

Misunderstanding necessarily disappears when people are frank. In the last four years the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) has published in a frank and open manner a vast amount of important news concerning its methods of refining and distributing petroleum products. It has explained the factors upon which prices are based; it has given figures which explain why the demand for its products, and especially for gasoline, is continually increasing; and by its frankness the Company has prospered.

The efficient and economical refining and distribution of petroleum products is a highly specialized business requiring years to develop. The very permanency of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is a dominant factor in the high quality of its service. Because of this permanency the management of the Company has been able to mature and carry out plans for service which required long periods of time and great sums of money to accomplish.

In its efforts to provide a perfect service, the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) has developed a constructive and comprehensive Industrial Relations Plan to promote harmonious relations between the management and employee. This program includes adequate retirement annuities, modern safety devices, continually improved working conditions, and a practical plan whereby employees are enabled to accumulate savings and invest them.

This program tends to make all employees better citizens and better workers, vitally interested in serving the public.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana) believes in fair dealing toward all, the public, its customers, its competitors, and its employees.

VOLSTEAD, SYMBOL OF "BONE DRY" IS
DEFEATED TUESDAY

Drys Have Something to Worry About in His Trimming.

BY CHARLES P. STEWART,
N. E. A. Staff Correspondent.

Washington. — Andrew J. Volstead was father of the Volstead law, but he represented only one vote in Congress.

In fact, it can't be said that his defeat means even that one vote's change, for the Rev. O. J. Kvale, who beat him, is "dry" too.

But Volstead's defeat means a great deal more than a vote in the House of Representatives. It means so much more that opponents of "bone dry" prohibition in the Seventh Minnesota district concentrated all their energies on his defeat in disregard of the fact that his rival was himself avowedly "dry."

Means Two Things.

It means two things:

A change in the chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives; and it is bound to have a tremendous psychological effect on congressmen—and throughout the country as well. This psychological effect may prove to be more important than the committee change, as heavily as that promises to weigh.

Volstead was Judiciary Committee chairman. A committee chairman has great powers. To a considerable extent he can smother proposed legislation that he does not like. It was recognized that prohibition enforcement modifications stood small chance ever of emerging from the Judiciary Committee, once committed to it, while Volstead remained its hand. His elimination from Congress clears this difficulty away.

Volstead a Symbol.

As for the psychological effect—congressmen notoriously don't like to stand for policies which bring defeat at the polls to those who adhere to them.

Volstead typifies "bone dry" sentiment as it was typified by no other individual in the United States, in Congress or out of it. He was a symbol, so to speak. And he went down to defeat. What does it matter that another "dry" was elected in his place?—he was elected by "wet" votes.

The Seventh Minnesota district result won't make any difference, of course, to congressmen whose constituencies unquestionably are "dry," but it will have a lot of effect on those from constituencies where there's even a little bit of doubt.

And as for the country at large—again Volstead was a symbol. His defeat solidifies "wet" sentiment. It is disorganizing to "dry."

YORK WINS JUDGMENT

By Associated Press Leased Wire

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 11.—The state court of appeals today affirmed a judgment of $400 in favor of Sergeant Alvin C. York, World War hero, as the result of opening a road through his property in Fentess county.

PICTURESQUE GOWN.

For a debutante is a smart frock of black velvet with a very full, long skirt and a close-fitting, sleeveless bodice. Ermine outlines the neckline and the line of the sleeve.

Oats that cook in five minutes

Quaker Oats now come in two styles, the Instant and the regular.

Instant Quaker, perfected by our experts, is the quickest cooking oats in the world. It cooks to perfection in 3 to 5 minutes.

Both have that matchless flavor which has made Quaker Oats supreme. Both are flaked from queen grains only—just the rich, plump, flavorful oats.

But in Instant Quaker the oats are cut before flaking. They are rolled very thin and partly cooked. So the flakes are smaller and thinner—that is all. And the small thin flakes cook quickly.

Tell your grocer which you want. If Instant Quaker, look for "Instant" on the label.
